Capone's criminal activity was widely overlooked by many unemployed working class citizens; to them, he was a hero. Capone kept these citizens pacified by paying for soup and bread kitchens. Pictured above, in 1931, is one of his many kitchens.

Here the unemployed men gathered in lines, sometimes stretching several city blocks, waiting to be served. To the left is presumed to be a few men that worked for The Chicago Outfit.

"Chisel? Grifter? Or Patsy? Capone has been keen on helping the the down on luck Joes and Scrubs of Chicago. Some say he knows how to speakeasy. So to this we ask, "What's your story, morning glory?"
